14.1. Why is it an important duty for the user to check the calculation results every time again on his own?

For many situations and circumstances different equations and formulae have been discovered and developed. Be aware, that any equation or any formula at least cannot be more than an instruction for computing certain values with each other. Anyhow, selecting a way that is proper to calculate and to evaluate significant values for the actual use case, taking the significant process circumstances under consideration, always demand special skills and knowledge. Technical standards, rules and even laws are changing from time to time. Due to this fact the user has to check regularly, if the application is up to date and in coherence with the actual standards, rules and laws before using the results for further actions or evaluations. This is relevant for time and place of the appliance!

This is why the user has always the duty to:

- Check if the own special skills and knowledge are proper to evaluate the actual use case, comprehensively and adequately.
- Check if the program is proper to cover the actual use case requirements, comprehensively and adequately.
- Check if the input values are realistic and proper before the background of the use case.
- Check if the output values are realistic and proper before the background of the use case (carry out own auxiliary calculations).
- Be responsible him- or herself for the decisions done according to the use of the program, respectively the software.
